Three Candidates and Many Issues Make Contest Most Complicated Since 1912

Klan, Soldier, Farmer, Women's, Labor, Wet and Dry Votes Will Affect Result.

ELECTION OF COOLIDGE

Confidently Expected by Forces In Charge of His Campaign Davis Managers Merely Hopeful LaFollette Subsidized With Deadlock.

By M. T. CONKLE
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—The Presidential contest which will send the voters to the polls tomorrow is the most complicated since the Wilson-Taft-Roosevelt election in 1912.

In addition to the presence of three prominent candidates in the field, the situation is further affected by the introduction of the Klan issue, both in the national and state contests. In addition to this, the soldier vote must be reckoned with and the women's vote is expected to more nearly approach normal than at any time since the passage of the suffrage amendment. In many eastern states the wet and dry issue is still active.

The entry of the American Federation and the Railroad Brotherhoods into the Independent campaign as avowed political forces adds haze to the Presidential atmosphere.

The LaFollette movement of 1924 is vastly different from the Roosevelt revolt of 1912. This Roosevelt bolt was a personal political crusade. The Republican party of the previous eleven years was virtually a Roosevelt party with a few conservative leaders holding out. The Roosevelt party had, of course, a fringe of Democratic progressives, but the Roosevelt appeal was virtually a Republican party split. The LaFollette independent organization of 1924 is vastly different in that it is an appeal to both Republicans and Democrats and bears the endorsement of labor and farmer organizations and carries within itself the germs of a now party organization.

Politicians are asking on the verge of tomorrow's ballot, how far the labor vote will follow its leaders; how far the farmers will go in the trail of their organizations. The labor vote is admittedly normally Democratic; the rural vote equally a Republican vote in the North.

On the eve of election the Coolidge forces claim victory, confidently; the Davis managers, hopefully. The most enthusiastic of the LaFollette managers also claim LaFollette's election, but most of the independent forces would be satisfied with a deadlocked electoral college to throw the election into the Congress.

Back of the managers, cheer leaders and war workers stand the mass of the voting population, unengaged, wearing no man's button, in store workshop, factory and farm.

They will give the answer tomorrow.

During the campaign, President Coolidge confined himself to letter writing, the reception of a few delegations, a very few speeches, by radio or in person. He conducted a White House campaign more retiring than Harding's front porch campaign in 1920. The Republican national ticket was largely represented on the platform by the dynamic Davis, candidate for second place.

John W. Davis, Democratic nominee carried his own banner from coast to coast, while his running mate, Bryan, made the pace in the Middle West, selected by Democratic managers as most likely to yield to the Bryan-esque appeal.

Senator LaFollette was prevented by illness from participating from the platform in his campaign until late, being represented on the stump in the earlier weeks by his son, Robert, Junior, and at times by his eloquent wife, while Senator Wheeler, second on the independent ticket, conducted the arena in his own behalf.

With the advent of the Klan into the active political field, religion became an open issue in several of the state fights, for instance, New York, while it was an underlying element in the Presidential race from the time that hot New York night, the Democratic National Convention, bated the issue almost to a bloody end.

The LaFollette people adhered to the announced program of confining themselves to the Presidential ticket and allowing their adherents to vote for the candidates for other offices whose records or announced principles most nearly coincided with their political and economic views. The American Federation of Labor came out with an endorsement of some three hundred candidates on the major parties' tickets.

Arbiter at Ball Game Killed After Disputed Decision

CHARLEROI, Nov. 3.—Thomas Roy, 19, died in Charleroi hospital from a bullet wound in the back received yesterday afternoon while officiating as headlinesman in a football game at Elco.

Roddy made a decision which was disputed by the players and at once taken up by a crowd of 400 spectators. Fearing a riot, Constable William Roy arrested Roddy, who tried to break away and was shot in the back by the constable. Roy was held to await the action of the coroner.

INTERFERING TO SAVE GIRL'S LIFE COSTS MAN HIS OWN

John H. Croft Shot Near Star Junction by Wife of Man He Grapples With.

MRS. STEVE CHUBBOY HELD

Interfering to save the life of a girl ended fatally for John H. Croft, 28 years old, of California, Pa., Sunday at the home of Steve Chubbay in Jefferson township, near Star Junction. After Steve is alleged to have fired at his sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Chubbay, Croft grappled with Steve to prevent him from again hitting Steve's wife, Susan, 24 years old, seeing that her husband was being worsted and thinking Croft was attempting to kill him, secured a bullet and fired at Croft, the bullet striking him in the chest.

The shooting occurred in the afternoon at the home of Steve. Earlier in the day a difficulty arose in the ordination of Louis Chubbay, father of Elizabeth between Elizabeth and Christ Holterman, her brother-in-law, and Mr. and Mrs. Steve Chubbay, one the spouses Elizabeth and Holterman left the orchard and went to Holterman's home. Afterward they went to Elizabeth's home and Jim father told them they could have all the apples they wanted.

In the meantime Croft had arrived at the home of Louis Chubbay and his accompanied Elizabeth and Holterman to the orchard. They found here were no buckets to gather fruit. A brother of Elizabeth, who was also in the party, told her to go to Steve's home for buckets. She started, Croft accompanying her. As they neared the house Steve is said to have appeared with gun and fired at Elizabeth. It was then that Croft rushed Steve and attempted to wrench the gun from him.

The body of Croft was removed to the funeral parlors of Ira Blair at Perryopolis and will be taken to California this evening. Croft is survived by his wife, Jessie Harris Croft, and three children, Nellie, Gour, Betty, three, and Dorothy, two. Croft formerly lived at Star Junction. The family left there several years ago. The mother is said to be living in Michigan.

Mrs. Steve Chubbay, with a babe at her breast, is in the county jail in Uniontown.

Mayor Kistler Will Be Asked to Explain Failure to Prevent Trouble.

DID WHOLE DUTY, HE SAYS

By United Press

NILES, Ohio, Nov. 3.—Major General Benson W. Hough, temporary military ruler of Niles, today asked Harvey Burgess, Trumbull county prosecutor, to call a grand jury to probe the Klan riot of last Saturday in which 11 were wounded.

Responsibility of city officials in the outbreak of mob violence will be ascertained, it was said. This means that Mayor Kistler, accused by anti-Kluxmen of being aligned with the hooded order, will be asked to explain what he did to halt the riot.

Only 51 per cent of the qualified electors in Fayette county voted four years ago. Let not this unsavory record be duplicated on Tuesday. There are 38,000 Republican voters in Fayette county. That is what the total Republican vote in the county ought to be on Tuesday. It is the duty of every Republican to go to the polls and vote.

"Too much emphasis, Republicans, cannot be placed upon the importance of voting—voting the straight Republican ticket, for, indeed, you have a ticket of which you may well be proud; that insures confidence that morally your whole-hearted support that stands solidly with the national administration so ably headed by President Coolidge."

My final plea in the campaign which closes with the election on Tuesday is for every Republican to go to the polls and vote—in to go to the polls and vote—and vote the straight Republican ticket.

That will determine the extent of the Republican victory in Fayette county this evening.

Six Hundred Cases of Former Service Men Handled by County Red Cross Chapter During Year

This is the first of a series of articles dealing with the present-day activities of the American Red Cross and especially the work of the Fayette County Chapter.

This article deals with home service to ex-service men and their families. Others will deal with Red Cross public health nursing, health centers and clinics, first aid, life saving, Junior Red Cross, volunteer service disaster relief and a final article covering miscellaneous activities and a summary of the work of the county chapter.

Service to ex-service men continues to be the paramount duty of the Red Cross. Since the Armistice it has expended over $50,000,000 for services to world war veterans and men of the Army and Navy. To the disabled veterans it supplements the work of the government.

During the past year Red Cross flushed inundated and in about the same volume as the previous year. This service is carried principally by the chapters of the Red Cross throughout the United States, but the assistance and cooperation rendered by Red Cross workers in government hospitals to disabled veterans is also a vital service.

There are now more than 15,000 disabled ex-service men in government institutions by reason of their military service and the Red Cross has assumed a duty to look after and care for the comfort of these men. And this number is slowly but surely increasing and Surgeon General Ireland of the Army states that it will not reach its peak for several years to come.

Here in Fayette County 687 cases of ex-service men or their families have been handled during the past year. Of this number 291 were new cases not previously dealt with. One hundred and two of these veterans were in need of some special hospital care or medical treatment. 332 required some form of financial assistance. Under the new adjusted compensation law 318 claims were filed.

There is very little help in this branch of Red Cross work so far as the Fayette County chapter is concerned and it will continue this work as its primary obligation so long as necessity demands.

Possible that Coolidge Will Not Have a Congress He Can Depend Upon to Support Him

SENATOR COLE, MEMBER OF LINCOLN CONGRESS, DIES AT AGE OF 102

Republicans Will Gain in House but LaFollette Bloc May Hold Senate Control.

WESTERN INDEPENDENTS

Running on Republican Ticket May Enable Coolidge With Democrats to Be Contested Next Chance for Turnover in Senate Will be in 1926.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—President Coolidge will not have a Congress he can depend upon to support him. The Republicans will make gains in the House of Representatives but the balance of power in the Senate will continue to be held by the group of so-called progressives and independents more or less under the leadership of Senator LaFollette of Wisconsin.

Only the psychological effect of an increase in conservative seats in the House together with the overwhelming popular vote for President Coolidge may affect the situation. Thus the control of Congress in both houses will remain nominally Republican. All western independents are running on the regular Republican ticket for the Senate with the exception of one, Magnus Johnson of Minnesota, who, however, has a real right on his hands against Thomas D. Schall.

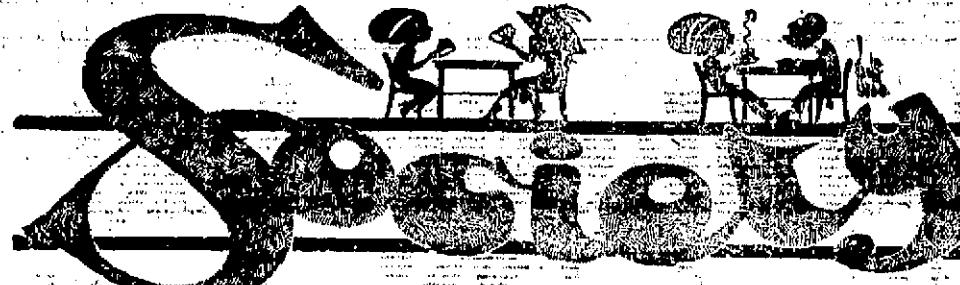

The Senate situation may be summed up as follows:

1.—Not enough seats are vacant this year—the Senate elects only one-third of its members every two years—to enable the Republicans to reap the benefits of the Coolidge tide.

2.—No matter how many gains are made by the Republicans the Democrats and the independent Republicans can continue their coalition as they have in the present Congress. Two years hence will furnish the next chance for a turnover in the Senate if the country retains its present conservative mood.

3.—The Democrats next Tuesday cannot possibly win control. Even if they won every seat for which they have a remote chance they would only have 49, or a majority of one.

4.—Thirty-two seats are voted upon this year for the Senate. Seventeen would appear to be Democratic and the remaining 15 Republican. Of the 15, however, five are really doubtful for the Democrats

VOTE! AND VOTE RIGHT!

In no presidential campaign in recent years have the issues been more sharply defined or more generally discussed. In no campaign has there been greater necessity for electors exercising their rights and privileges at the polls. Staying away from the polls, except for illness or equally valid reasons, will as definitely place citizens in the slacker class as did allure or refusal to do their full duty during the World War.

For the first time in the history of the nation a determined assault has been made by a political party on the fundamentals of constitutional government. An effort is being made to deprive the people of their right to select their chief magistrate at the polls and, instead, throw the election into Congress in which case the alarming possibility would exist that a candidate for whom only a minority voted would be elevated to the Presidency. The will of the voters, as they had expressed it at the polls, would thus be defeated.

Every person who neglects or refuses to vote tomorrow will to that extent make such a condition possible. Are you willing to assume your share of so grave a responsibility?

You can avoid it in only one way. That is by going to the polls tomorrow and voting for candidates whom you know stand for the preservation of those ideals in government which have made our nation the greatest and most favored on the earth, and whose people have the high privilege of choosing their own rulers.

Don't allow that privilege to be taken from you. Vote! And vote right! Vote as your pride in being an American citizen urges you should vote!

A TICKET DESERVING OF SUPPORT.

The Republican ticket is deserving of the support of every member of the party, no less than members of other parties who are vitally interested in seeing the best interests of the nation, state, the 8th Congressional District, and the Legislative Districts promoted during the next two or four years.

Calvin Coolidge for President, and Charles G. Dawes for Vice-President, represent the unanimous choice of the party as expressed at the Cleveland convention.

Frank M. Tressler for Judge of the Superior Court; General Edward Martin for Auditor General and Samuel S. Lewis, were selected by the voters to be standard bearers of the state in this campaign.

Samuel A. Kendall, Representative in Congress; William J. Burchinal, Representative in the General Assembly, First district, and Joseph B. Henderson, Emmitt J. McDaniel and Joseph K. Bush, Second district, have so acceptably proven their worth in their respective offices that each should receive majorities that will be a just, proper and deserving measure of recognition.

MUST KEEP UP OUR INTEREST AND ENTHUSIASM.

The large attendance of adults at the football game on Saturday, and the active interest they displayed, was the best proof thus far offered this season that the home people do have the disposition to get behind the home team. Under the stimulus of the prizes offered for touchdowns and advertising posters and cartoons more lively interest was aroused in Saturday's game than any played on the home grounds this year.

The members of the team showed their appreciation of the boosting done in their behalf and notwithstanding they did not do their best playing until the second half, they gave the fans the full worth of their money, and, by scoring on the Washington team, accomplished what no other contender against it had been able to do this season. This was no mean accomplishment for the opposing team is composed of players who more nearly rank with college than with high school teams in point of size, weight and resourcefulness on the field.

That there was, as generally a desire on part of the fans and friends of the High School to encourage the home team, is highly praiseworthy. The team has been playing against heavy odds throughout the season but they have not become disheartened. They are determined to do their

AMERICA EXPECTS EVERY PATRIOT TO DO HIS DUTY!

The National Republican
Narrowed down to real issues, there are only four in this campaign. Two divide the Republican and Democratic parties; two the Republican and LaFollette-Socialist parties.

The issues between the Republican and Democratic parties are the tariff and the League of Nations. It is the bread line vs. the full dinner pail; prosperity vs. hard times; the traditional American policy of national political and economic independence versus involvement in the war-breeding, security-sacrificing "system" of Europe.

Between the Republican and LaFollette-Socialist parties the issues are even more vital; American constitutional government versus European class or bloc government by constitutional sabotage; the rights of private property and individual liberty versus state socialism, confiscation and political domination of industry and employment.

Upon the issues which divide the Republican and LaFollette-Socialist parties the Democratic presidential candidate is neutral. Upon the tariff issue the LaFollette-Socialist party adopts the Democratic policy of assault upon the protective policy.

The practical decision to be made on November 4 is between the election of a President by the people, and the choice of a President by Congress. Only these alternatives present themselves. The result will be one or the other.

To throw the election of President into Congress means four months of uncertainty and apprehension which will paralyze business, reduce employment, impoverish and demoralize the country, and open the way for further radical assault upon the foundations of national security and prosperity.

The one hope of sound, stable government and national prosperity is in the candidacy of Coolidge and Dawes. It is a choice between safe progress along a well defined highway, and a leap in the dark.

The forces of unrest and "legal revolution" will reveal tremendous strength on November 4. To underestimate the danger would be folly.

It is up to every well-wisher of this republic to be up and doing between now and November 4. Otherwise the outcome of the election may be disastrous in a degree now undreamed of by the indifferent and the unthinking.

Just before his fleet engaged the enemy at Trafalgar, Admiral Nelson sent to the mast head of his flagship this signal:

"England expects every man to do his duty."

And as we go forward to this historic battle, upon which the future of this country depends as upon no other election since the establishment of this republic.

America expects every patriotic citizen to do his duty.

host for the honor of the institution they represent and the town they are proud to call their home.

To fall in continued support of the team, whether it wins or loses, will be much more to the discredit of Connellsville than for the team to close the season without winning a single game. The boys of the team can depend upon us to do their full part. The people of Connellsville must do their bit by making each succeeding home game a bigger success than that of Saturday in point of attendance, interest in and enthusiasm for the home team.

Skeleton Found By Hunting Party

MOUNT PLEASANT. Nov. 3—Practically bare of flesh and with shreds of skin connecting the bony structure, the skeleton of a human body was found in a thicket not far from the Westmoreland County Home by hunters at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon. J. D. Hays of Hunkerstown made the discovery.

The sex could not be definitely determined. Deputy Coroner Dr. M. W. Horner of Mount Pleasant who viewed the find Sunday morning, holds to the opinion that the remains are those of a man, basing his theory on the fact that the bones in the skeleton seem to be heavier than those usually found in a woman's body. No bones were broken and the remains gave no evidence of violence from that standpoint.

Secondary Education For Farm Children

Of the many reasons for the interest of farmers and farm communities in school consolidation none has perhaps had more weight than that it offers a means of bringing secondary education to farm children while they live at home on the farm under the guidance and with the companionship of their parents. That rural people are intensely and fervently interested in going to high school when they can, i.e., when high schools are accessible and efficient, and that countywide consolidation does offer an acceptable solution for the problem of educating farm youth, is indicated by returns just received from the Bureau of Education from the county superintendent of Randolph County, Indiana.

This is a county in which one-room schools have been entirely replaced by consolidated schools. Last spring 870 children enrolled in the schools of this county completed the eighth grade. This year 329 of them, or approximately 80 per cent, entered the freshman year of high school. In a number of schools in the county 100 per cent of the eighth grade graduates of June, 1924, are enrolled in high school this fall. That this is not an exceptional record in the community is shown by the fact that the total enrollment in the rural schools of the county in September, 1924, was 4,301. Of this number, 1,141, approximately 26 1/2 per cent are in high school. This exceptional record is not due to consolidation alone; other factors

William M. Butler, At The Helm
Of Coolidge-Dawes Campaign, Is Far From Stranger To Politics

Direction of a national campaign is a task requiring outstanding capabilities and who is chosen to perform it. Tacit keen political judgment and organization skill must be combined with a personality engaging enough to make and hold friends.

William M. Butler, chairman of the Republican National Committee, who has directed the Coolidge campaign for this work because the Chief Executive had determined through long years of association with him that he was "ideally equipped."

The wisdom of the delegation has been manifest since it was made. Chairman Butler has perfected an organization which is working on smoothly and accomplishing its purpose without friction.

It has been said of the chairman that he "is as silent as Coolidge." This is an accurate appraisal. Add to that typically New England shyness and the lack of tolerance for the opinions of others and a high regard for their worth, together with an undiminished interest in politics and it is not difficult to agree with the President in his choice.

There are some who believe that Butler is a comparatively new man of large industrial enterprises.

"THE PAINTED FLAPPER"—On view today and tomorrow at the Paramount, is a decided departure from the usual run of flapper pictures.

The role of "The Painted Flapper," showing both her promiscuous and then chastened personalities, is portrayed by Pauline Garon, who does infinite justice to an exceedingly complex characterization.

James Kirkwood, that ever popular favorite of movie fans, is prominent in the cast and also in the scheme of things in the picture that is conceived through the manipulations of the flapper. Mr. Kirkwood plays the part of the man from abroad who has come back to the scenes of his former joys and misery.

In the quest of mental relaxation, the man from abroad, wanders into "The Cat's Pajamas," a night rendezvous for flappers and their stalks. It is written with the captivating charm of the ever popular "Painted Flapper" only to learn that she is the little girl, his daughter, whom he left behind with his wife when he departed to other parts of the world.

With this premise, the story developed many thrilling moments and kept the audience on edge throughout the performance.

The Soisson

"THE LOVE MASTER," a first National picture in which Strongheart, the wonder dog, is seen in the leading role, is the leading attraction today.

Since the release of his first picture, about two years ago, Strongheart has been one of the most popular stars on the screen, and his current production seems to hit the fancy of every one.

Perhaps it is because "The Love Master" is not a starring vehicle within the meaning of the description in motion picture circles. Strongheart is undoubtedly the leading member of the cast by right of the ability he displays, but the picture was not built up around him. The story is the main consideration, and because Strongheart has plenty of things to do and does them in splendid fashion he gains recognition as the star. But evidently he is not jealous, for he seems pleased to share honors with Mrs. Strongheart, registered in the American Kennel Club annals as Lady Julie, and five sons and daughters of his, as well as an extensive human cast including Lillian Rich and Harold Austin.

Then there are many thrills. The picture has hardly started before the heroine is caught far from home and safety by a pack of fawnish wolves, and only the speed of Strongheart saves her.

The Orpheum

"THE BEDROOM WINDOW"—A Paramount picture with May McAvoy and Malcolm MacGregor appearing in the leading roles, opened today at the Orpheum for a three-day attraction.

A story with the hero and villain unknown—until the last reel! And several persons suspected of murder until the final moment!

Most motion pictures begin with clearly defined characters of good and evil, but Clara Beranger has reversed the method in her original comedy-drama, "The Bedroom Window." In fact, suspicion shifts in so many directions that seldom will two persons agree upon the same suspect at the same moment.

The story opens with a murder. A young clubman rushes into the darkened bedroom of a New York banker and locks the door behind him. When the police break in, they find him with a revolver in his hand and the body of the financier on the floor.

When the banker's secretary arrives and refuses to admit where he has been, suspicion falls upon him also. A neighbor is suspected of having bought a gun and then having left town. A fascinating woman is brought into the case. Here are four suspects already. Then, when the sister-in-law of the banker and the family lawyer begin seeking clues, a writer of "detective thrillers" and reveals the entrance of the lawyer into the case creating unique complications.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday, William Farnum will be seen in "The Man Who Fights Alone."

"I wish you would," sobbed Andrew and cried harder than ever.

MacClester rolled his eyes heavenward as though he implored aid. "Listen," he said, talking into the sky. "Listen and I'll tell you what I do. Are you listening?"

"Yes," gasped Andrew.

"Well," said MacClester. "You've been a lot of trouble to me and a big loss. You can't expect a dry man to forget a whole case of schnaps. Now I'm going to let you write him a note and if you can get him to give three cases of gin for you, why, we can have you—"

Andrew stopped crying, sat up straight and dabbed her eyes with her very dirty fingers, but there was a strange, set look in her face that made MacClester doubt her sudden cure.

"Will you do it?" he asked.

"Never," said Andrew. "You're queer, like all of them," he commented musingly. "But somehow the suggestion stopped you crying."

"What on earth is that?" asked Andrew, her eyes fixed sharp ahead on an enormous pale-yellow dome that looked as if all the haystacks in the world had been gathered into one.

"That," said MacClester, his vast chest swelling in equally immense pride. "It's my castle, my hut."

"I think there is something the matter with my eyes," said Andrew. "What I see isn't possible."

"Oh, yes it is," said MacClester. "That my hut; eighty feet high, one hundred and twenty feet across and more than a hundred yards' dash around."

"But how did you build it?" asked Andrew, absorbed in spite of her misery.

"Well," replied MacClester, "I'm modest. I don't mind admitting that did the building; I just came along and put on the roof. Trevor ever show you any maple trees?"

"Yes, they are wonderful," said Andrew, understanding beginning to dawn in her eyes.

"That hut of mine," said MacClester, "is nothing but the biggest, roundest, widest maple tree in the world, trimmed a bit and thatched over."

Half an hour later they made a landing. "Want me to carry you again," asked MacClester with a leer, "or will you walk?"

"The walk," said Andrew, going suddenly white with sickening recollection.

CHAPTER XI.

MacClester's castle was a masterpiece of ingenuity. In its center rose the stupendous cube that had astonished Andrew even from a mile away. Around the monster hut was an impassable boma or barrier of thorns pierced by a single entrance; outside the boma, in the form of a ring, came an enormous bottom court which embraced a large shade tree, indispensable as a nucleus for powwow and men's gossip. Around the beaten circle were three thickly serrated rows of huts and their dependent outhouses. Enclosing the entire human behive was a stockade of giant cactus with an arched entrance at each point of the compass.

Aside from the repulsive fundamental idea of the enterprise, MacClester's establishment was fascinatingly moral. It was true that he had concentrated for over a hundred and eighty wives in strict accordance with native law, but it was equally true that he allotted this army of concubines, without exception, to veritable husbands and men's gossip. Around the beaten circle were three thickly serrated rows of huts and their dependent outhouses. Enclosing the entire human behive was a stockade of giant cactus with an arched entrance at each point of the compass.

This innovation would have struck at the root of the Africa's conception of vested interests had it not been for the giant slinger's canny astuteness in facilitating to the dromes the purchase of one wife each in their own right, thus killing two birds with one stone: for the native male normally works but once in his life and thus to earn the sum with which to acquire the mate who will not only therefore support him but eventually bring him a return of two or three fold on his investment.

As a consequence, MacClester never lacked bootboys, machilia carriers, ivory hunters or porters and caravans as well an army of women and girls whose spare time was applied first to the preparation of food and wood and water fetching and then to the cultivation of the enormous shambas which produced corn and millet in great abundance for the lucky members of the close corporation.

There was a subtle poison at work somewhere in this social cosmography was evidenced by the fact that while there was always a long waiting list of recruits for the estate, however there was also a tendency on the part of many natives to face starvation rather than accept the questionable invitation of the white man in the intimate structure of their family life. It was further evidenced by an abysmal apathy which seemed to possess MacClester's people in direct proportion to their increasing well-fed and lazy sleekness.

This, however, was a phenomenon that did not trouble him so long as there was a constant demand in excess of the supply of marginally able; on the contrary, while it puzzled him, he welcomed it as making toward the easy enforcement of a strict discipline. In all matters that affected the internal life of the strange camp, he was sole arbiter beyond any caviling, and a martinet.

Andrew could have taken a reasonably calm interest in all the details that crowded to her attention during her rapid progress into the heart of MacClester's stronghold had it not been for an incident that revivified all her fears and repugnance toward the man and which occurred as they entered the ring court. MacClester, striding ahead of her, suddenly paused and his horrid face apparently achieved the impossible by undergoing a dazzling transformation.

His eyes had fallen on a group of carriers, newly arrived, and the crew of his freight boat. The negroes were squatting in a circle on guard, waiting to make delivery to their master of various cases. Some of them evidently contained cloth, cotton and knick-knacks dear to the native heart, but one, at least, openly proclaimed in deeply burnt stenciling its contents to be gin. It was on this small square box that MacClester's eyes were riveted. He turned and spoke to Andrew in an oily tone that for some inexplicable reason froze her blood. It was as though he had suddenly assumed a new and strange personality upon which her twelve hours of brave intercourse with him had had no occasion to establish its grip. He became a

Coker Rooters Proud of Team Even As It Goes Down Before Washington; Final Score 41-6

Touchdown by Connellsville in Second Half Brings Rounds of Cheering.

FIRST TEAM TO DO IT

Connellsville, High School's game little warriors, with the "never say die" spirit, battled against great odds in the clash with the Washington High School here Saturday afternoon. It is true that in the first half, when all the breaks (and some that were hard to take) were with the visitors, the locals did begin to go to pieces but between halves Coach Lerow or someone put a new life into the squad and the latter two periods were a game worth seeing.

The score was 41-6, but Connellsvilleans who attended the game got some keen pleasure out of that lone score. It was made without the help of a single break but through straight, desperate football. The locals responded to the heroic game and some of the forward passes completed against the would-be scholastic champions would be a credit to any team.

There is little to dwell on in the first half. Starting off by holding the visitors the Cokers received a punt. They immediately scored a first down and on the next play a fumble was made, the Blue and Black outfit recovering. It resulted in a score. The visitors had the ball most of the time in the half, Connellsville occasionally holding. When the second quarter closed the score was 23-0, Washington having crossed the goal line four times. About the only interesting feature of those two periods was the working of the snappy Washington team. It ran wild against the Cokers, who had plainly "gone up."

When the second half opened it was a different story. Then the teams looked evenly matched. The locals had been calmed down. They had been talked to seriously and when Washington received the kick-off the offense knew it was against a team of little demons.

Half-hearted tackling, for the most part, was supplanted with hard lunges that brought men down. "Curly" Angie set the pace in this. He fairly flew at the knees of the opposition and they always came up slowly. In the first half the Cokers were consistently getting hurt because they were hitting hard-running visitors with only half enough force, thereby getting all the effects of the shock themselves.

When the third quarter opened Connellsville kicked off. Washington marched straight down the field for a score. It being one of the two registered that half. The point for goal was not good when Washington was off-side.

The Cokers again kicked off and held Washington, taking the ball on the visitors' 40-yard line. Then for the first time the local offensive got into action.

Scholar chased around and for a few yards, Chorpening fumbled but recovered and a forward, Trump to Scholar netted a first down. There was a little rush. Then the aerial attack was again tried. Once more the Cokers completed a pass. Trump to Angie. Two like plunges netted another first down.

Scholar passed once again and it was completed. Trump to Scholar. The latter almost went across, being downed on Washington's eight-yard line. Then the third quarter ended.

When play started again another forward, Trump to Angie, was completed and the blonde youth staggered over the goal line as three tacklers hit him. He held to the ball and the score had been made, although Angie was weak from the severe jolt of the tackle. Trump failed to score the point after touchdown.

The score was then 34-6. The Cokers had completed four consecutive forward passes, some of them fairly dazzling in their execution. Connellsvilleans were grasping the ball in their fingers and holding it. The play was steeping with brilliancy, as it took that kind of offensive to even penetrate the Washington defense. Coker rooters made the most of it and when Angie dropped over the goal line the stands fairly howled. That touchdown made Connellsville howlers feel they had accomplished something and it sent several hundreds of people to their homes feeling a new enthusiasm. Feeling which has been pent-up all season, awaiting an opportunity to break through, gave vent to itself for that one-half score, and the Cokers deserved it.

Connellsville kicked off again and once more Angie set the pace with a score. This time, however, he was tackled in the first down and the ball was recovered by the locals. The Cokers had the ball again and this time, after a series of passes, Angie had the ball again and he ran the ball out of the air and scampered for a touchdown. The extra-point kick was blocked.

After the third kick-off made by Connellsville, Angie intercepted a forward pass. Immediately the locals completed three consecutive forwards, netting a first down. Another pass, Trump to Stillwagon, netted 20 yards. "Newt" was in the game with an in-
